

Patricia Linder brings 35 years experience as an educator to the National Literacy Project. Her professional practice reaches from K-12 to adult education and includes program administration, evaluation, technical assistance, professional development, and classroom instruction.

As Senior Research Associate with the University of South Florida's David C. Anchin Center in the College of Education, Ms. Linder oversees a wide range of projects, including state initiatives to provide professional development and technical support for adult, community, career, and technical educators in 36 of Florida's 67 counties. Her completed program evaluations include the 2006-08 Florida Department of Education implementation of the federal Reading First initiative; the 2006 Academic

Ms. Linder co-authored Measuring the Effectiveness of Professional Development Training published in the Winter 2007 volume of ERS Spectrum. Currently a doctoral candidate, Ms. Linder is completing her Ph.D. in Curriculum and Instruction at the University of South Florida. She holds an M.A. in Elementary Education (University of Tampa) and a B.A. in Music Education (University of South Florida).